The butterfly revelion

La rebelión de la mariposa

The sudden death of all animals on Earth divides the society of the Republic of Heden in two: the Celestials, the ruling elite; and the Domestics, inferior beings from beyond the Wall who are used as slaves—strictly forbidden to touch or even look at the Celestials.

Eva Salazar, daughter of the Minister of Food, leads a perfect life. Or so the media claim when her upcoming wedding becomes a national spectacle. What the cameras don't show is that the marriage has been arranged for political gain, with a man she does not love. Nor do they know that Nina—the Domestic who raised her and whom she secretly loves like a mother—is about to be cast away on the other side of the Wall.

It is then that Eva realizes the only path to justice in this segregated, oppressive society is to stand against the government of the Republic of Heden—and only the members of the Liberation Front can show her that even in a world where animals no longer exist, there are still people willing to fight for freedom.

Greta, the host of a Catalan gossip show, is equally loved and hated. Her life seems like something out of a dream until her partner decides to leave her live on air and confess to having an affair, turning her into the center of mockery. She is then forced to take refuge in Vilavella del Roure, her hometown, a place she promised never to return to. And it's not surprising, because there she is greeted by a family led by a blunt grandmother and a first love whose heart she once broke.
